Quelques paroles de Monsieur le Cure

Somewhat blear-eyed and definitely sleepy, I am writing this on the morning after the elections.

Although the presidential campaign left much to be desired in terms of civility on the part of too many, President-elect Trump struck a particularly gracious note in his acceptance speech, especially complimenting Secretary Clinton.

Most importantly, the citizens of our country have exercised their right to vote and selected members of the Electoral College who support their freely made choices. When the Electoral College assembles in a few weeks, the delegates will discharge their mandates and select Mr. Trump as the Forty-fifth President of the United States of America.

On January 20, President Obama and President-elect Trump will make their way to the Capitol and Mr. Trump will take the oath of office. This simple procedure will mark the transition of power from the one to the other.

This is a tremendous amount of power, the office of the President of the United States of America. A simple ceremony marks a change in authority of arguably the most powerful nation in the world.

In his acceptance speech President-elect Trump acknowledged the deep divisions in our country. He hopes to unite the country.

There is much evidence that our country is divided, painfully so, but is the division irreparable?

As a people of faith, you and I need to help heal these divisions.

First, stretching all the way back historically to our first pope, Saint Peter, we are admonished to be exemplary citizens (see 1 Peter 2:13-17). So we need to fulfill our duties as citizens, particularly working for justice, as Pope Paul VI taught, so that we can find peace.

We also can offer our prayers on behalf of the nation as well as on behalf of those who govern.

We can also give good example by expressing our opinions after careful thought and reflection, always respecting others, even if the differences of opinion are deep.

We can also refuse in our words and actions to contribute to the lack of civility around us. We cannot claim to be faithful to the Lord if we foment hatred or bitterness. This is not the way of the Lord so it cannot be our way either.

(Msgr.) Courville
